

Telecommunications Daily
<http://www.tr.com/newsletters/trd/>

June 21, 2007

EX-FCC STAFFER TO HEAD APT BROADBAND CAMPAIGN

The Alliance for Public Technology has named Joy Howell as director of its new “broadband changed my life” campaign, which will advocate for a national policy to stimulate broadband deployment and demand through such measures as universal service support, tax incentives, low-interest loans, and grants. Ms. Howell was director of the FCC’s Office of Public Affairs (now known as the Office of Media Relations) during the chairmanship of William E. Kennard; her subsequent career included founding Cambridge Strategic Partners, a Washington-based public policy communications and telecom consulting firm.